Job Posting

The Chair of Empirical Economics at the University of Potsdam is seeking to fill a Pre-Doc Position in Labor Economics for 6-12 months.

The successful candidate will work with Marco Caliendo and Katrin Huber on ongoing empirical research projects in labor economics and policy evaluation using microeconomic methods starting in October 2022 (or later). The position is designed for advanced Master's students in Economics with excellent training in econometric methods and prior experience working with individual data. Applications from students with an excellent Master's degree who wish to pursue a PhD will also be considered.

The University of Potsdam is part of the Berlin School of Economics (BSE) and is located just outside Berlin, with close ties to universities, research institutes, and research networks in the Berlin area (e.g., BeNA, BAMS, DIW, WZB). Moreover, the Pre-Doctoral Researcher will benefit from the weekly research seminar and various events organized by the Potsdam Center for Economic Policy Analysis (CEPA).

Working hours, starting date and duration are flexible. Remuneration is based on the general rules for the German public service and depends on the applicant's qualifications. The application deadline is September 15, 2022. For questions and further information, please contact Marco Caliendo or Katrin Huber.

Applications – including a brief motivation letter, CV and relevant certificates – should be submitted online to recruit-empwifo@uni-potsdam.de. We particularly encourage women and other historically underrepresented groups in economics to apply.
