

Dr. Katharina Mohring is a PostDoc in Applied Human Geography at the Institute of Environmental Science and Geography at the University of Potsdam. She earned her Ph. D. at the university of Potsdam for a space-related analysis of mass media communication. Her current research interests include digital and society-nature transformation processes with special regard to urban issues.

Prof. Dr. Nina Brendel is a professor of geography Education at the University of Potsdam. After completing her teacher training, she received her Ph. D. at the University of Münster for the works on reflective thinking and digital learning environments in the context of Education for Sustainable Development. Her current research interests include virtual reality in geography education, using Educational Technologies to facilitate ESD competencies with learners and teachers, New Learning Paradigms and participatory research methods.