News for the summer semester 2022

Campus Buddies at the Faculty of Arts

“Closing Learning Gaps, supporting students”

This is the motto of the Campus Buddies program, which is intended to accompany, advise and support students of the Faculty of Arts for the first time in the coming summer semester (SoSe 2022).

The coronavirus pandemic has impacted every aspect of daily public and private life, and university is no exception. The start of studies was postponed, lectures and seminars did not take place in full lecture halls, and were forced instead to take place online. Moreover, you couldn't get to know your fellow students over a coffee, but instead had to rely on WhatsApp or the Zoom chat.

Much of what otherwise seems to be taken for granted has been denied to the students who have started their studies with us at the Faculty of Arts since the summer semester 2020, and that is meant to change in the coming summer semester.

Don't know how to find and borrow a book from the library? Feeling a little lost on campus? Don't want to go to the canteen alone anymore? Are you studying with a child and are looking for a changing table, or do you need an overview of barrier-free access on campus?

In the summer semester 2022, our Campus Buddies will be on hand to give you help and advice. On April 27, 2022 from 4-6 p.m. (Campus Am Neuen Palais, 1.09.1.12) you will have the opportunity to get to know the campus buddies and network directly with them as part of an informal kick-off event.

There will also be a number of offers over the course of the summer semester. These include among others:

- Peer-to-peer advice on questions and problems during your studies, either in individual discussions or in a group
- Specific assistance and referral to contact persons on various topics, e.g.
 - Scientific writing, various forms of testing and proper research
 - the digital platforms of the University of Potsdam (Moodle, Pulse, etc.)
 - the possibilities of student participation at the university
 - Studying with special life situations (children, illness, etc.)
- Network events of all kinds, e.g.
 - pub rallye
 - campus rallye
 - Language get-togethers
 - Sport events (e.g. soccer games)
 - Family picnic on World Children's Day
 - Parent-child afternoons on the campus playground
 - and much more

If you have urgent questions about your studies, the organization of your studies, the locations, or other counseling options, please take a look at our Moodle course “Studying at the Faculty of Arts” or send us an email:

DAAD guest professorship at the Historical Institute: Prof. Elena Isayev from the University of Exeter

The planned English-language courses include a lecture series on “The History of Migration & Displacement” (see below) and two seminars, “People Out of Place Then & Now” and “Ancient Journeys and Migrants”.

Prof. Isayev is a specialist in the history of migration, works across epochs and builds bridges between science and museum practice.

One-off events and workshops

Kick-off event for the Campus Buddies of the Faculty of Arts

Wed, April 27th 2022 | 4 - 6 pm | 1.19.1.12

During an informal kick-off event you will have the chance to meet the Campus Buddies and connect with them directly.

We kindly ask you to register for the event in advance. (<https://www.uni-potsdam.de/de/phifak/studiumlehre/campuspatinnen>)

Workshop on the history of the University of Potsdam

Wed, June 1st, 2022 | 2.15 - 6.30 pm | The venue will be announced in good time

Please note: The workshop will be in German.

The founding of the University of Potsdam in 1991 was controversial from the start. The debate on how the transformation of the teacher training college into the new university and the earlier scientific achievements of the East Germans should be evaluated reached a high point on the occasion of the 25th anniversary in 2016. The research project on the transformation of East German universities, launched in 2019 and headed by Prof Frank Bösch and Prof. Dominik Geppert would now like to bring together different views and perspectives in a workshop and discuss them with (former) university members and the university public. One concern is to let those status groups and university members, also from other “predecessor institutions”, have their say, which have so far been heard only little or not at all. This includes in particular former students, the scientific mid-level faculty and the university administration. The first research results will be discussed at the workshop: What experiences shaped everyday university life during the period of upheaval? What memories do Potsdam alumni have of their student days? What contacts existed between East German mid-level faculty and West German professorships? These and other topics can be discussed in detail at the workshop. The entire university public is invited!

Workshop “My (professional) future belongs to me - career orientation for humanities scholars”

Wed, June 15th, 2022 & Wed, August 10th, 2022 | 2 - 6 pm | 1.19.1.19

15 places each - registration via the homepage is possible from May 1st. Participation is free. If you cannot make it, you are requested to cancel your registration no later than 3 days before the event.

Please note: The workshop will be in German.

This workshop is aimed at all humanities students who are still unsure about the professional future that is or could be waiting for them. Together we will examine your strengths, your proven and potential skills, as well as your interests, wishes and goals with regard to your studies and your professional career. In the plenum, as well as in groups or partner work, we develop possible options for action and research different professional fields. The aim of the workshop is to give you important impulses for targeted studies and an overview of potential next steps that will help you make informed decisions when entering the job market.

Lecture series “Lotman Lectures. Cultural Semiotics in Transition. On the occasion of Jurij Lotman’s 100th birthday.”

Organisers: Susi Frank (Berlin), Brigitte Obermayr (Potsdam), Susanne Strätling (Berlin) and Annette Werberger (Frankfurt/Oder)

Tue, 4-6 Uhr | at changing locations / hybrid / online | from 19.04.22

Culture as text, text as a system of signs, a system of signs as a semiosphere, semiosphere as translation, translation as crossing borders, crossing borders as dialogue, dialogue as historical dynamics, historical dynamics as a memory mechanism, memory mechanism as culture – from the cultural semiotics school founded in Tartu and Moscow in the 1960s, terms and concepts emerged that have had a pioneering influence on literary and cultural theory to this day. Jurij Lotman (1922-1993), the school’s leading theorist, developed a comprehensive scientific perspective that encompassed literature, painting, art, music, and theater in dialogue with a large circle of colleagues at the interfaces of semiotics, structuralism, cybernetics and information theory as well as natural and cultural spaces, the logic of cultural evolution or the relationship between madness and reason.

Not least because of this analytical range, cultural semiotics, as one of the few theoretical approaches of Eastern European provenance, was received, critically discussed, adapted, and applied far beyond the spatio-temporal borders of the Soviet Union.

The lecture series deals with the establishment and foundations of the Moscow-Tartu cultural semiotics school, dedicates itself to a critical inventory of its key theorems into the present, and presents current readings and further developments for discussion.

Lecture series “Migration and Displacement – Histories, Stories and Myths”

Sponsored by DAAD and the Department of History at the Faculty of Arts, University of Potsdam and ROUTES: Migration, Mobility, Displacement Network, University of Exeter, UK

Prof. Dr. Elena Isayev

As we witness multiple ways people are on the move, by desire or by force, crisscrossing oceans, mountains, skies and at times borders, we note that the unceasing movement may be accompanied by a surge of assertions about fixity of people, importance of sustaining traditions and the naturalness of ethnic or national boundaries. These are often projected back into history as the norm. As movement increases, voices proclaim desirability of the opposite – and with it emerge stories of pause and homelands – real and imagined. It could be that we are faced with just such a moment now in the 21st century.

An emphasis on locality and homeland, while living in an age of intense mobility, is not an uncommon paradox. It does not disprove the mobility thesis, and may even confirm it – we cannot get away from the immense impact of movement in our evidence. Yet, it is a response that gives prominence to stasis rather than motion as the basis for understanding transformations of human relations with each other and the natural world around us. This view has affected how we interpret societal forms, the creation of institutions, formation of boundaries and modes of cultural interaction and belonging. If, however, we accept the fact of a mobile rather than a stable society, our understanding of the dynamics of change alters. Migration becomes a constitutive presence and not a challenge to an otherwise naturally static state.

The historical paradigms we will explore in this lecture series with international guests and ROUTES network (Exeter, UK), touch on different moments in time, providing a long-term perspective on contemporary concerns by locating them in rival contexts. In these dynamic situations human mobility is sometimes thought acceptable, and sometimes perceived as anathema, and the person coming from elsewhere may be welcomed or repelled simply for being from elsewhere.

The lecture series is also a “Vorlesung” at the University of Potsdam – students of the University of Potsdam please enroll in the class via PULS! Additional information available in the Moodle-course (URL tbc).

Enrolment via Puls

Racism and anti-Semitism are part of everyday life at school. Racist and anti-Semitic situations, atmospheres, attitudes and ultimately incidents are initiated by pupils, parents, but often also teachers. Teachers confronted with these issues often feel helpless: how to react? What kind of reaction is adequate, politically correct, subjectively feels right to me and is objectively necessary or even imperative? How can I handle my own fear, anger, resignation or bias? How can I help those affected without victimizing them? Whom can I turn to for advice or help? These questions require different emotional, psychological, rhetorical, educational, ethical, and legal answers. This course aims at enabling students to develop self-reflexive situational solutions and attitudes that help them handle racism and anti-Semitism. It will also focus on preventative intervention measures that will help call into question present dimensions of power and dominance, identify incidents of racism and anti-Semitism as what they are, and breaking patterns of (unwanted) reproduction of racist structures and ways of thinking.

Permanent offers of the Faculty of Arts

Career orientation for Humanities scholars

“What comes after my studies? What prospects and opportunities do I have? How can I gain practical insights during my studies? How can I assert myself in the job market?”

These questions are of particular concern to students of the Faculty of Arts who are not studying to become a teacher. The possibilities are varied and the professional fields are often unspecific. This is exactly where the “Career Orientation for Humanities Scholars” project would like to tie in, raise awareness of the topic, show perspectives and create opportunities for practical insights.

Until March 2021, the “career orientation for humanities scholars” was a sub-project of the university college funded by the European Social Fund, but it is now an integral part of the Faculty of Arts and is constantly being improved and expanded. In the coming semesters, there will be regular events that are intended to provide insights into a variety of careers and work fields that are of interest to humanities scholars.

Furthermore, the project coordinator is the contact person for co-operations with institutes or individual departments as well as student councils, in order to raise awareness of the topic within the framework of tutorials, workshops or information events, and to provide assistance with individual career orientation.

If you are also concerned with these questions or would like further information on career orientation, cooperation opportunities or an overview of the offers, please visit our homepage or send an e-mail to:
